Woodcrest Commons residents visit Maplewood Park

From cherry parfait and peppermint twist to Julia Child and Betty Boop, roses of every color regaled Woodcrest Commons residents during a recent visit to Rochester's nationally-accredited gardens at Maplewood Park. Featuring more than 3,000 rose bushes, the gardens were in full bloom.

Pictured here, Woodcrest Commons residents Sylvia Emma, Joyce Booth, Lilli Reesen, Rosanne Bourne and Joanne Hackett stroll among the flowers at Maplewood Park.

"Quite a few of the residents remarked, that like myself, we've driven by the rose garden so many times, but have never stopped," said Activities Director Lindsay Lown.

Lilli Reesen remarked that in all the years she's lived in Rochester, she's embarrassed at the number of area landmarks she hasn't visited. Now, thanks to outings she's taken while living at Woodcrest Commons, she can check off the Maplewood Park Rose Gardens and the Charlotte-Genesee Lighthouse, located near the Port of Rochester.
